Do You Know
What to do if you suspect that your child has a disability?

If you suspect that your child may have a learning disability or require special education services, you should give that information in writing to the school system. The following information explains the process for requesting an evaluation for your child.

How to submit a letter of request

1. Submit the referral in writing
   Include:
   - Statement that you suspect a disability
   - Request for a comprehensive evaluation
   - Date letter is written
   - Date you expect to hear back from the school
   - Your signature, address, phone numbers, email where you can be reached

2. Keep a copy and send copies to:
   - Special education director at school
   - Principal

First Steps to Evaluation

If your child is identified as needing extra help, a committee comprised of you and other school professionals may be formed. This committee might be called a screening committee, a child study committee, a pre-referral committee, or similar name. The committee’s major purpose is to:

1. Discuss your child’s learning and developmental needs
2. Consider adaptations or alternative strategies to address those needs. For example, your child may need intensive help with reading, and may qualify for time with a reading specialist.
3. Determine whether your child’s learning and developmental needs are significant enough to require a formal evaluation.
4. If the committee believes a full evaluation is needed, they send that recommendation to the special education director. You are notified with a letter including an evaluation consent form. IDEA regulations require schools to make a decision about evaluation in 60 days from receipt of the written referral letter.
