Youth Leadership Development Series

National Center for Family/Professional Partnerships (NCFPP) in collaboration with the Autistic Self-Advocacy Network, Kids As Self-Advocates, and Youth MOVE is pleased to offer a 3-part webinar series for youth and young adults only.

March 21st: Participating in Advisory Groups: Savannah Logsdon-Breakstone from the Autistic Self-Advocacy Network shares what youth self-advocates need to know in order to serve on boards and other groups; specifically what youth can expect and how to fully participate in meetings. Savannah will share tips and strategies to help youth leaders get involved and get the most out of these experiences.

April 11th: Telling Your Story for a Public Purpose: Reid Caplan from the Autistic Self-Advocacy Network will use his extensive experience as an advocate to share opportunities for using personal stories for advocacy purposes. His presentation will include an explanation of a public comment period and how to make sure that the people in government hear your concerns? Learn more about new ways to be heard!

May 16th: Working with Adult Allies: Savannah Logsdon-Breakstone from the Autistic Self-Advocacy Network explores how youth self-advocates and adult allies can collaborate effectively: What works best? What are the pitfalls to avoid? What makes a good ally? What can you do if things go wrong? Learn all this and more, from an advocate who has been on both sides of the table.

The National Center for Family / Professional Partnerships (NCFPP) provides leadership development to family and youth leaders and professional partners in order to promote the engagement of families in meaningful ways in systems level activities and encourage the reduction of health disparities through family engagement.
